O'clock two mental health works came to my front door and wanted to chat to me

I was in my front room working on my website about suing the doctors police council and others involved in my claims when I heard a knock on my window at first, I choose not to pay attention as I thought it was my neighbours banging at me on the walls or floorboards as they still do. When I heard the knock again, I went to look at who it was and due to still having no intercom system I had to open my front door and look through the communal front doors glass pane. I saw a black man and a black woman I could remember the man's face as being a Mental Health Worker who I was then writing my insurance claim about.

He asked me if I would let him in the block of flats and I asked him why. The man told me where he was from and that he wanted to talk to me. I asked him why.

He told me that they had received another referral

I asked who from and he told me from tsocila serves.
